

It started with a nickel.

A man, an idea, and a great American dream. That's how the first "parking lot" was born. For young Andrew Pansini, that launched his business of commercial leasing and management.

He had arrived in New York from Italy in 1907, then landed in Los Angeles with 11¢ in his pocket. In 1917, while standing on a street corner in downtown L.A., he saw the need for "off-street parking," thus creating the first of over 100 parking lots, known as Savoy Auto Park, on owned and leased land. It was just 5¢ for all-day parking.

This personal service won us legions of customers. It also created a way of doing business that was friendly, honest and quite successful.

Over the years, our business grew to Northern California. We expanded through development and investment, from Rain Tunnel gas and car washes to office and retail properties.

Today, as a real estate company, we're proud to still treat every one of our customers like family. Each enjoys the benefits of well-located, well-maintained properties; honest, personalized service; quick decision-making; all backed by a financially sound corporation. And it all started with a nickel.
